Telemedicine Wins Statewide Marketing Award

TONI BAKER

The Medical College of Georgia's initiative in developing a system that makes health care more accessible and less costly in Georgia is the grand winner of the 1995 Marketing Award for Excellence (MAX).

This third annual MAX Award, sponsored by Georgia State University's Department of Marketing and the Atlanta Business Chronicle, recognizes the best of new products, services and marketing innovations in Georgia-based companies or divisions.

Georgia State University's Marketing RoundTable, comprised of top marketing executives from 22 major Atlanta businesses, selected MCG and its telemedicine program from a field of a dozen finalists.

"One of the biggest things determining its selection was its potential societal impact," said Danny Bellenger, chairman of Georgia State University's Department of Marketing. "It's the way it distributes a service. It's a significant innovation in the delivery of a product, and the potential to have major impact on the cost and quality of health care overall is astounding."

"I am delighted for the Medical College of Georgia, the Telemedicine Center and the state leaders who have steadfastly supported this university and the telemedicine program," said MCG President Francis J. Tedesco. "I think it's a validation of the tremendously positive, innovative role of MCG and of telemedicine as one of its products."

Telemedicine is an interactive patient-examination system designed to eliminate distance in the provision of health care, thus addressing issues such as rural health-care delivery and lower health-care costs. Telemedicine technology uses a special grouping of

MCG, Emory Form Managed-Care Group

TONI BAKER

The Medical College of Georgia Hospital and Clinics and the Emory University System of Health Care and its affiliated hospitals have joined in a statewide network of physicians and hospitals designed to offer Georgia's businesses convenient, cost-efficient health care.

Russ Toal, former director of corporate services for the Emory System, is president and chief executive officer of the new hospital network called Georgia 1st. In addition to MCG Hospital, Emory's 35 affiliates representing 47 hospitals across Georgia are eligible to participate in Georgia 1st.

National health-care reform efforts have accelerated the private sector's work to reduce health-care costs, which is the role of management and managed health care, said Dr. Charles H. Wray, MCG vice president for clinical activities and Georgia 1st board member.

"Companies that have employees scattered all around the state of Georgia want one health-care management plan for their employees," he said. This includes a single insurance provider as well as physicians, nurses and other health-care providers in the cities where employees live, he said. At the same time businesses are interested in reducing costs, hospitals are working to ensure an adequate patient base for the future, Dr. Wray said.

"This is an important step forward in MCG's participation in managed health care," said Dr. Darrell G. Kirch, dean of the MCG School of Medicine. "It's necessary, as more patients come under managed-care plans, to ensure that MCG remains available to those patients as a place to get high-quality health care."

Academic health-care centers must secure an adequate patient base not only for their financial security, but for their educational mission as well, said Dr. Francis J. Tedesco, MCG president. "To ensure a solid referral base, we want to participate in networks with managed care," he said.

MCG ROUNDUP

If you could eliminate one item from your work wardrobe, what would it be?

Editor's Note: This week's Roundup question was asked to employees in MCG's Dugas Building.

I can dress casually, so for me, that's not really a problem. But if I had to pick something, I guess I'd say shoes, because they usually hurt.

Oh, definitely panty hose, especially in the summer. Who wants to wear panty hose in the summer time?

I don't like to wear dress clothes; I'd rather wear a uniform. I hate to make the decision about what to wear every morning.

telephone lines and two-way interactive voice and color television systems upgraded into a medical system with devices such as electronic stethoscopes, otoscopes, laryngoscopes and endoscopes that enable thorough patient examinations.

Experience has shown that 85 percent of patients seen via telemedicine do not have to leave their communities to receive definitive health care. The patients therefore save time and money, and rural communities are able to maintain more of their patient base.

The MCG Telemedicine Center became operational in November 1991 with a hookup between MCG Hospital and Dodge County Hospital, 130 miles from Augusta. In 1994, the Georgia Statewide Telemedicine Program was developed, which will link 59 hospitals, clinics, doctors' offices and correctional facilities to the telemedicine system. Georgia Senate Bill 144 – the Distance Learning and Telemedicine Act of 1992 – has allocated $50 million to fund the expansion plus distance-learning initiatives, which enable long-distance education using similar technology.

Currently the MCG Telemedicine Center is working with evaluators at the University of Michigan to examine many aspects of this new mode of health-care delivery. Information gathered will be used by the Health Care Financing Administration to evaluate other states' telemedicine programs and determine reimbursements for care provided via those systems.

FACTS Campaign Kicks Off March 23

The Medical College of Georgia will kick off its 1995 Faculty for the Advancement of Clinical Care, Teaching and Science (FACTS) campaign with an orientation breakfast meeting for campaign representatives March 23 at 7:30 a.m. at the MCG Alumni Center.

The annual campaign, initiated in 1992, is designed to familiarize faculty with the function of the MCG Foundation and to raise funds to benefit the university.

Department representatives within each unit will contact the faculty to educate them about the campaign and to give them an opportunity to support the university. Sixty-six percent of the faculty participated in last year's campaign, raising $185,902. Several units had 100 percent participation, including the MCG Hospital and Clinics administration, the School of Allied Health Sciences administration, and the School of Allied Health Sciences Departments of Dental Hygiene, Health Information Management, Occupational Therapy, Physician Assistant and Respiratory Therapy.

The goal this year is for 100 percent participation within each department, said Dr. James B. Osborne, vice president for university advancement. Faculty participation is vital not only to benefit the university, but to attract external financial support, Dr. Osborne said. "Foundations and corporations use faculty giving as a critical indicator of faculty commitment to an institution and its goals," he said. "One area that could especially benefit this year is student scholarships, but a contribution to any fund would benefit MCG."

If donors desire, they may designate their gifts to a specific area or project on campus. Donations can be made through payroll deduction for one-time contributions, for a specific number of months or on a perpetual basis. Checks also will be accepted.

For more information about the FACTS campaign, contact Terrie Damato English at ext. 1-3397.

Distance-Learning Reaching Out to State's Youth

TONI BAKER

The Medical College of Georgia Department of Pediatrics has launched a research initiative that uses today's interactive, distance-learning technology to improve the health of Georgia's children.

"Not only do we want to provide excellent pediatric care in the Children's Medical Center, but we want to become a national leader in providing pediatric health education to prevent disease," said Dr. Warren B. Karp, professor of pediatrics and head of the pediatric distance-learning initiative.

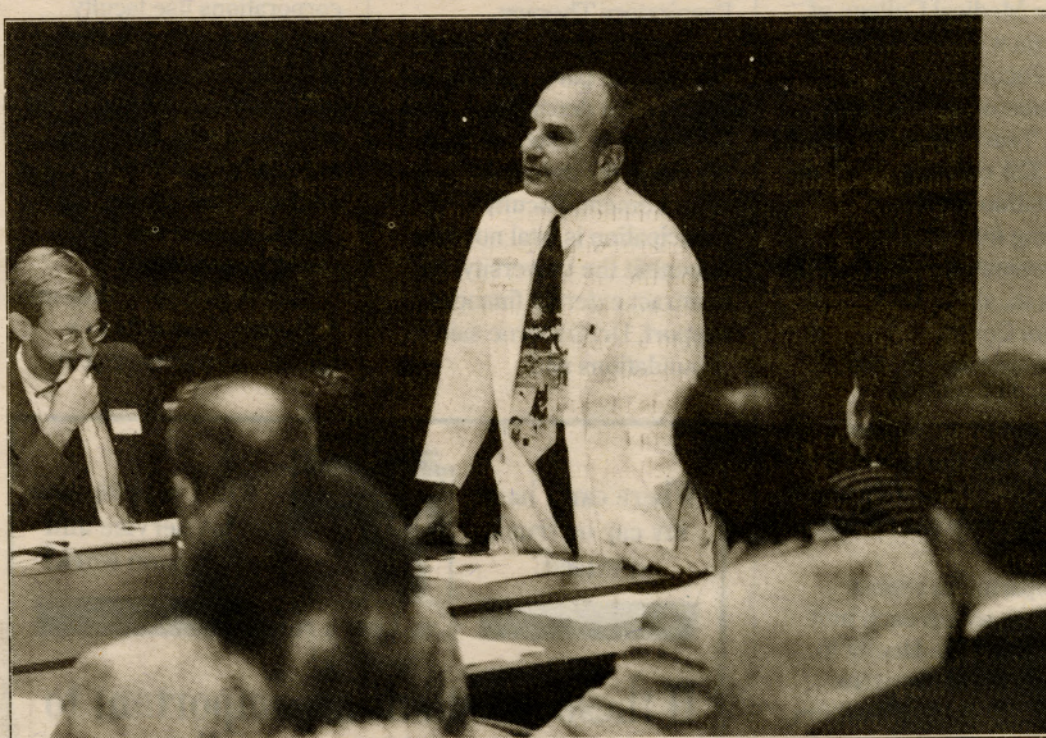

Communication is via the Georgia Statewide Academic and Medical System, which has some 140 sites in Georgia. Satellite connections and the international information system Internet make it possible to share programs with other states and even other countries, Dr. Karp said.

"What we are providing is live, interactive programming," he said of the new distance-learning initiatives that eliminate distance while providing the same educational exchanges that are possible in classrooms.

With this initiative, teachers can, for instance, learn from a physical therapist about the special needs of a child with a crippling disease such as muscular dystrophy; students can learn from a child with this disease how they can be supportive classmates; and nurses working in rural Georgia can learn the latest on the cardiovascular health of children.

Infants, children and adolescents, particularly minorities, rural Georgians and those physically and emotionally challenged, will get information first-hand through this new, multifaceted approach to health education and disease prevention, said Dr. Karp.

Dr. Warren Karp chairs meeting of Pediatrics Distance-Learning Steering Group.

But the initiative also focuses on making lifelong learners of children's caregivers, including their parents and teachers, as well as their physicians, nurses, dentists and therapists, he said. This includes plans for a special national pediatric computer network that will give children's health-care providers an easy way to get their questions answered.

"We are planning for the future. We are looking to establish MCG nationally as a major distance-learning leader for children in conjunction with the new children's hospital and we are looking to provide MCG graduates with access to lifelong learning," Dr. Karp said, referencing the new Children's Medical Center scheduled for completion in late 1997.

This new education effort involves teachers, parents and a cross-section of resource groups interested in children's well-being such as the Georgia Department of Education, the Parent-Teachers Association, the Georgia Office of Rural Health, Children's Medical Services, the American Heart Association, the American Cancer Society and the East Central Georgia Health District.

From MCG, the Departments of Pediatrics and Family Medicine, Schools of Dentistry, Nursing and Allied Health Sciences, the Robert B. Greenblatt, M.D., Library and MCG's Division of Continuing Education and Telemedicine Center will each lend their expertise.

The first program of this initiative, held Feb. 6 in conjunction with the Georgia Department of Education and the Georgia Nutrition Council, was designed to help teachers better understand the nutritional needs of children and was prompted by recent changes in school lunch programs to bring them in line with federal dietary standards, Dr. Karp said.

The program was held via distance-learning sites at Kennesaw State College in Marietta, Swainsboro High School, Columbus High School and Brunswick College. A similar program was held March 6 with distance-learning sites in Snellville, Dahlonega, Waycross and Macon.

Future courses include one in September on the heart-healthy child for pediatricians, family physicians, pediatric nurses, family medicine nurses and dietitians and a fall course for college students on the health of Georgia's African-American college students.

ECMO Celebration Slated March 18

The 10th anniversary celebration of the Medical College of Georgia's extracorporeal membrane oxygenation (ECMO) program, a lifesaving effort that temporarily takes over the work of ailing hearts and lungs, will be held March 18.

Face painters and clowns will entertain former patients from 2-5 p.m. at the MCG Student Center. About 200 patients from Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama and North Carolina have been placed on ECMO at MCG.

The MCG Children's Medical Center had one of the first 10 ECMO programs in the country; in 1985 it began as the first ECMO program for newborns in the Southeast, expanded for older children in 1992 and for adult patients at MCG Hospital in 1994, said Becky Hollins, registered nurse and ECMO manager.

ECMO uses technology similar to that used during coronary bypass surgery, in which blood is removed from the body, replenished with oxygen and returned to the body, thus allowing the lungs to rest and heal. It can be used for days or even weeks at a time when more standard therapies such as

University System's Budget Passes House, Senate

Editor's Note: The following is an excerpt of recent activity in the Georgia Legislature relating to the University System of Georgia.

The University System of Georgia's fiscal 1995 amended budget has passed the House of Representatives and the state Senate. Gov. Zell Miller is expected to sign the bill.

Greeted positively by the legislators, three of the Board of Regents' special initiatives were addressed in the amended budget. "This action is a vote of confidence in your leadership and vision," wrote Chancellor Stephen R. Portch in his letter to the regents.

The amended budget includes $42,385,000 in bonds for the Medical College of Georgia Children's Medical Center.

Other projects addressed in the budget include:

- $13 million in flood recovery funds for the planning and reconstruction of Albany State College. All but three of the college's 41 buildings sustained damage during the July 1994 flood. The approved funds will be allocated from lottery revenue.

Please see "BUDGET," p. 7.

ventilators, which force oxygen into the lungs, aren't sufficient to adequately oxygenate the patient, Ms. Hollins said.

Indications for ECMO include babies born in respiratory failure or patients in severe respiratory distress for a variety of reasons such as near-drowning, viral or bacterial pneumonia, smoke inhalation, trauma and aspiration pneumonia. ECMO also can be used as a bridge for patients in heart failure, either before or following surgery.

Neonatologists, surgeons, pediatric intensivists, nurses, respiratory therapists and other member of past and present ECMO teams will have an opportunity to see former patients during the celebration, Ms. Hollins said. Plans include adding pictures of all former patients to an ECMO photo album, she said.

- $500,000 for the Major Repair and Rehabilitation Fund.

Also in legislative news, House Bill 690 is being considered. The bill would change the employer's contribution under the regents retirement plan. Effective July 1, 1996, the University System of Georgia would contribute on behalf of each participating employee the equivalent of 8 percent of the employee's earnable compensation. The bill has been read for the second time.

Re/Max has been a corporate sponsor of the Children's Miracle Network since 1992. Nationally, Re/Max has raised $5.3 million for the network since 1992. In those three years, the company locally has raised approximately $10,000 for the CMC.

Locally, Re/Max has four offices and about 75 agents. The agents are invited to coordinate individual fund-raisers and to participate in the company's "Closes for Kids" campaign, in which percentages of sales profits are perfect mesh – a win-win situation," said Barry Ellis, director of communications for Re/Max. "We're very happy to be a part of this community effort."

The Augusta area has one Sam's Wholesale Club and seven Wal-Marts. All eight stores participate in fund-raisers throughout the year to benefit the Children's Miracle Network. Last year, the local stores raised more than $71,000 for the CMC.

"All our employees participate," said James Lewis, marketing manager for Sam's Wholesale Club. "We've done all kinds of things to raise money, and this year, we're adding an art auction." The auction will be held May 11 at the Old Medical College.

Both groups toured the CMC to see close-up the kind of work their fund-raising supports. The CMC includes a 111-bed inpatient facility and extensive outpatient program treating patients from Georgia's 159 counties and beyond. Its staff includes specialists in virtually every pediatric medical field. Its child-life program treats patients' emotional, social and academic needs. Also, MCG basic and clinical researchers work continually to better understand and treat children's diseases and injuries. MCG currently is building a $42 million facility to be built adjacent to the MCG Hospital to house the CMC.

Employees Asked to Heed Parking Rules

Public Safety reminds the Medical College of Georgia community that employees and students who park in patient parking when not on campus as a patient or visitor will be fined.

The fines are $25 for the first violation, $50 for the second and $100 for the third.

A recent spot check revealed that 70 to 75 students or employees were parked in the patient parking side of the deck in front of the hospital. Another 15 were in the lot in front of the Student Center.

"Citations will be voided for those who are legitimately parked in a patient/visitor lot as patients, or who are visiting patients in the hospital," said Public Safety director Bruce Morgan. "We will check with the practice sites, though, to determine that these employees or their family member did in fact have appointments."

Patient parking is increased in the parking deck in front of the hospital Tuesdays and Thursdays when the outpatient load is at its peak. Normally, 915 spaces are allotted for patients and visitors; 5,610 are allotted for MCG employees. Campus and hospital administrators are currently developing new projections for parking requirements and an updated plan to meet employee and visitor needs. In the meantime, remember that the MCG shuttle operates from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. weekdays and serves the hospital, Chafee Street and Annex parking areas.
